

Animals for Adoption

Contributed by Suzanne Winter
Wednesday, 30 August 2006

Do you like animals? In general I would say that this is a stupid question. However, there are a few individuals out there who really don't care for animals. Regardless, if you do love and appreciate animals, then you probably have a pet or two. This is the norm for most households. Whether it be a dog, cat or just a goldfish, we all typically tend to enjoy a nice companion. This is where the numerous animals for adoption come into the picture. Where did you acquire your puppy or kitten? Did you venture out that ridiculously expensive pet store at the local shopping mall or did you check out the nearby Humane Society? As for me, I did the whole Humane Society thing. There are just so many less fortunate animals for adoption now days. Why not lend them a helping hand, or home?

Did you know that you could sift through a plethora of animals for adoption without even leaving your home? It's true; you can easily jump on your personal computer and check out all animals for adoption in your area, online. Or even take a gander at all animals for adoption across the country. It's completely up to you. No one ever said that you couldn't drive 2000 miles for that perfect breed of dog or rare kitten. I personally just headed on over to my local Humane Society to take a look-see at all the beautiful animals for adoption. There were much more than I had ever expected. Sure, I had planned on seeing maybe ten cats, but was surprised when I was face to face with about fifty. Yikes! How would I ever choose? Well, after handling about five different kittens, I was hooked on one of them for certain. He was a cross-breed that resembled a Russian Blue. His name was Ivan and I was astounded at his cool demeanor. In no time at all, Ivan was our new cat. The funny thing is that my wife went back and grabbed a second feline. She came home with a long-haired female. Just what we needed; clumps of fur all over the house. As it turned out, Ivan and the girl, Sherah, are best buddies now days. Needless to say we are happy with the cats we selected. So, if you are also interested in animals for adoption, you should check out your local Humane Society. Trust me; this is much cheaper than any pet store. Our two cats only cost us 100 bucks total. Get online and check out all the great animals for adoption today.